THE LIGHTNING-ROD DISPENSER.

Of a lightning-rod dispenser that dre ped down on me one day, With a poem it, his motions, with a mon in his mien. With hands as white as lilles, and a facommon clean. No wrinkles had his vestments, and his linen glistened white, And his new-constructed necktie was an interesting sight; Which I almost wish his razor had made red that white-skinned throat. And the new-constructed neektie had composed a hangman's knot, Ere he brought his sicek-trimmed carcass for my woman tolks to see,

And his rip-saw tengue a buzzin' for to gouge a gash in me. But I couldn't help but like him-as I always think I must,

The gold of my own doctrines in a let low-heap of dust ; When I fired my own opinions at this person, round by round, They drew an answering volley, of very similar sound;

I touched him on religion, and the hopes my heart had known; He said be'd had experiences quite simllar of his own. I told him of the doubtin's that made dark my early years; He had laid awake till morning that same old breed of fears. I told him of the rough path I hoped to heaven to go; He was on that very ladder, only just a soon convinced. And 'twas getting toward the middle of a hungry summer day, There was dinner on the table, and asked him would he stay?

And he sat down among us, everlasting trim and neat,

Talking like a blessed angel-eating like a-blasted tramp.

My wife she liked the stranger, smiling on him warm and sweet, (It always flatters women when their guests are on the eat), And he hinted that some ladies never lose their early charms, And kissed her latest baby, and received it in his arms. My sons and daughters liked him, for he had progressive views, And chewed the quid of fancy, and gave down the latest news; And I couldn't help but like him, as I fear I always must, The gold of my own doctrines, in a fel-
